

The purpose of this study is to examine prevention of youth problem behaviours, to research these behaviours and the relationships with social determinants, and to look at the effects of a community-based prevention strategy. Research questions addressed in this study come from activities that have been carried out during the last ten years in different socio-cultural contexts, especially in the Netherlands. Communities That Care (a community-wide prevention strategy for neighbourhoods and cities) played a central role in these activities. It is theoretically introduced and its scientific and practical consequences are discussed.

Harrie Jonkman works as a senior at the Verwey-Jonker Institute. His work focuses on the social and cognitive development of children and adolescents, social determinants and prevention of health, developmental and behavioural problems. He is involved in experiments and evaluation of social and educational programs, longitudinal studies and international comparative studies.
